Founded 25 years ago to give voice to the environmental justice movement, Race, Poverty & the Environment (RP&E) has evolved into a unique forum that brings together activists, organizers, academics, and policy-makers. In 2014, Reimagine! was formed to carry forward this legacy in accordance with a vision articulated by Grace Lee Boggs: “The time has come for us to reimagine everything ...to reimagine work and go away from labor ...to reimagine revolution and get beyond protest ...to think not only about change in our institutions, but changes in ourselves.”

Reimagine! Highlights:

- Covers a broad spectrum of topics including environmental and climate justice, migrant rights, gender analysis, and the many dimensions of economic justice.
- Publishes special sections on subjects such as women organizing in education and health, domestic work, social reproduction and feminist solidarity.
- Serves 60,000 unique visitors monthly at its website (www.reimaginerpe.org) where a world-wide audience reads hundreds of articles reporting on and analyzing social justice movements, downloading over 1.5 million pages per year.
- Provides thousands of universities around the world access to 25 years of url-stable archives of RP&E articles through the premier online archive of academic journals, JSTOR (www.jstor.org/journal/racepoveenvi).
- Organizes open editorial meetings, panel discussions, workshops, trainings and performance events that lift up issues impacting disenfranchised communities enabling participants to effectively use their experience to create strategies and solutions that empower and transform.
- Amplifies the voices of organizations and individuals from a broad spectrum of issue- and constituency-based movements via articles, podcasts and co-publishing arrangements with progressive news outlets through the independent publishing network The Media Consortium.
- Offers full-service consulting to organizations seeking to write, edit, design, publish and distribute text and multi-media content. The same team of professionals who work together to produce RP&E have created books, annual reports, websites and graphic designs for organizations such as Movement Generation (MG), Mujeres Unidas y Activas (MUA), Center for Story Based Strategy (CSS), The Kresge Foundation, Feminist Alliance for Rights, Roadmap Consulting and others.

In Copenhagen, Mexico and Paris, RP&E reported from the UN climate conferences featuring voices from frontline communities, indigenous nations, and women. RP&E produced and distributed to delegates a special edition: “Climate Change: Catalyst or Catastrophe?”

“This was what Race, Poverty & the Environment helped us to do: to speak for ourselves, to form our own stories, do our own research and explain how our communities are affected,” said Miya Yoshitani, executive director of the Asian Pacific Environmental Network.
